Hello Mrs. [REDACTED],

As for performance in class, I would say that [REDACTED] is about average. When he puts his mind to it, he can do very good work. He is currently missing a few assignments of mine. I cannot tell you exactly where his grade stands because both Mr. [REDACTED] and I share responsibility for the sophomore class.

As for his behavior, he could stand some improvement. He is often a source of distraction within the class. His seating assignment was recently changed in order to attempt minimizing this. The two detentions that he was assigned were a direct result of this and his need to have the last word. Immediately prior to vacation the students were working on a web design that I wanted each student to complete on his own. [REDACTED] was out of his seat on several occasions. Each time I told him to return to his seat. He would respond that he was "helping" another student. I told him that I wanted each student to complete the assignment on their own and repeated the request that he return to his seat. He complied. After going through this 2 or 3 times, I told [REDACTED] that if I had to tell him to return to his seat again that he would be assigned a detention. I then asked him if he understood. He replied, "Maybe." with a smirk on his face. In response to this showing of disrespect, I assigned him a detention and repeated my question. This time his response was "Perhaps.", again delivered with a smirk on his face. This earned him the second detention.

If you have additional concerns that you would like to cover with me or Mr. King please feel free to contact us.

Thank you,

Larry Lambert
